BRING ON THE CAMPAIGNING

Thoughts from the chair

In the last edition of Avon Area News I talked a bit about the challenges surrounding membership of the Ramblers. Since I wrote that article, membership of the charity has continued to decline. It is unlikely that this can be put down to one or two specific reasons – although I am sure that many people will have views and ideas as to why. Remember – we can't be doing everything right if walking as a pastime is on the increase, whereas membership of the Ramblers is decreasing.

One of the central pillars of the charity is to ensure that footpaths in the UK remain open and accessible. Could it be that the level of activity in the area is decreasing? Or perhaps the campaigning that is being done is no longer widely noticed?

The worst case scenario could be that people have got used to good access to rights of way and simply don't understand or care about the on-going work to maintain this position.

In the local area I see campaigning going on throughout the year – there are a number of dedicated volunteers who have significant expertise and experience in resolving footpath and access issues. There have been some notable successes in both the Bristol and Bath areas, which I suspect many members are not aware of. We are in the process of re-launching the Avon Area website, and part of the thinking behind this is to allow campaigning volunteers to publish recent achievements more easily and generate additional support from local members when needed. We will let you know when this goes live.

I'm keen to see a prominent local campaign become more widely publicised. I realise that this can only happen when a worthy issue becomes publicly contentious – perhaps there aren't any such issues in the local area at the moment? I find this hard to believe – only recently we won access to land that a landowner had obstructed with the use of a shotgun. Continued campaigning is central to the Ramblers – it is after all what most people would justify as the reason to be a member over other local walking clubs. We must continue to be seen to be effective in this area in the future.

On a different subject, it will have come to some peoples' attention that Ramblers Central Office has recently announced that Ramblers Holidays is no longer its preferred holiday company. In the future, HF Holidays will become the 'official' holiday partner. Publicly released information about the reasons for the change is currently thin on the ground – suffice to say that management and the board decided it would be beneficial to adopt the new partnership for membership and income generation. It will be interesting to see how the new relationship develops over the next twelve months. If we become aware of any new benefits for members, we will let you know in a future edition of Area News. Ramblers Holidays will continue to support individual groups and areas via local advertising.

“Those whom the Gods wish to destroy they first make mad”.

Has the Coalition Government been mugging up on its double bind theory?

Ron's Ramblings

Let's start with the deathless prose of “The Natural Choice: securing the value of nature” June 2011 Secretary of State for Defra: Nature is sometimes taken for granted and undervalued. But people cannot flourish without the benefits and services our natural environment provides. Nature is a complex, interconnected system. A healthy, properly functioning natural environment is the foundation of sustained economic growth, prospering communities and personal wellbeing. That is why we must properly value the economic and social benefits of a healthy natural environment while continuing to recognise nature's intrinsic value. The Government wants this to be the first generation to leave the natural environment of England in a better state than it inherited. There follows a mind boggling 92 commitments.

As Ramblers the environment is naturally close to our hearts and we should be reassured by Defra's paper except that I do not see any costings or any talk of a budget that would make these things happen. It would have been more re-assuring if the Government had made a simple (and not unduly expensive) commitment to extending coastal access. Ramblers Central Office noticed the discrepancy between fine words and action: Shockingly, this paper doesn't mention the future of coastal access, showing a lack of commitment to improving access around the English coast. In their responses to our letters and in their answers to Parliamentary Questions, government officials have refused to say whether they will allow Natural

England's work on the coastal route to continue beyond the work already started in six specific areas (Weymouth Bay, Durham, Norfolk, Kent, Somerset and Cumbria).

Not long ago there was this gem: You don't have to live in or near one of our treasured woodlands to appreciate the important role they play in shaping the character of our natural environment. Whether it's taking the dog for a walk, going for a bike ride or entertaining the kids during the school holidays, forests and woodlands go to the heart of our quality of life. And they're home to a plethora of wildlife that we're safeguarding for future generations. The Future of the Public Forest Estate in England Defra 2011. There followed the most ill-judged, poorly thought-out set of proposals that prompted even the Government's most natural supporters to rise as one to rubbish them and its author.

Which brings us to “A New Era for the Waterways”. Canals are an endless source of pleasure to walkers. Their future and that of the connections between them and their landscapes is of the greatest importance to us. Here is what Richard Benyon, Government Minister thinks: They play a vital role in our leisure, recreation, health and wellbeing. They are precious habitats for wildlife; attractive places to visit for boaters, anglers, walkers and cyclists; and important heritage sites, with Britain's third largest estate of listed buildings and structures.

The Government is hoping to transfer this invaluable asset to “civic society”. This is not a problem in itself. Maybe a new charity is the best way to run waterways. What makes one concerned is the break-neck speed proposed and the lack of any Government funding for the transition. The consultation paper asks endless questions but nowhere does it give the opportunity to comment on the Government's financial commitment. Increasingly we are seeing such "consultations" cunningly constructed and phrased so that key issues are not genuinely addressed. It looks in this case as if the Government would be quite prepared let inland waters sink or swim before the new charity has got off the ground.(to mix a couple of metaphors).

So the Coalition leads us on with fine words and then confounds us with lack of commitment and action. The politics of the mad house?

Oh yes, double bind theory. In the fifties and sixties it was used to help explain the causes of schizophrenia – for example a parent says one thing and then contradicts it with their actions, causing emotional and conceptual turmoil.

(With apologies to any reader who has a serious mental condition.)

Ron Phelps, Access Officer.

By the way I have given up my seat on the Joint Local Access Forum. A touch of volunteer fatigue! But the Ramblers, and walkers generally, are still well represented by Peter Gould and David Waterstone.

ALMS FOR OBLIVION

As the Hoodies and the Government combine talents to wreck civilisation, I bring good news. The riverside paths in Bristol that we have spent a decade and more asking for, are close to legal and physical existence. The Council has even found a gap in the network that I'd missed and seeks to dedicate it. As the long drawn out Dundry case demonstrates, it is easiest and cheapest to identify anomalies and resolve them before they turn in to problems. Yet more good news: the Bristol Walking Strategy public consultation has belatedly taken place. Not a bad strategy, but the RA response which Susan Carter wrote with a few hints from me, could make it a rather good one. That was a short sentence but between us Susan and I attended three ghastly "stakeholder events" and studied two revisions of a "Council Glossy"; rather a good glossy as these things go, but still fifty pages of platitude and wooliness, with the occasional error and evasion.

The question subtly addressed above is "what do the members get for their subscription?" All the latest national office begging letter could suggest was the Rights of Way Act (1990) and the Countryside and Rights of Way Act (2000). Further down the glacier, there is still activity, the constant dripping that wears away a stone.

At the top, charity professionals may be chasing the grant to pay their own salaries. Locally, we still practise the old virtues of perseverance, intelligent, detailed argument and patience under the stress of bureaucracy,.

Do I want to point a moral? Well, a Duchess by temperament, yes I do. The next time some Middle English scrounger whispers "Don't pay the RA a subscription. I just pick walks of the internet or borrow my friend's programme", state loudly and clearly "you are a cheap swindler, a traitor to the Big Society, an ethical cancer and David Cameron, our Greatest Moralist since Dr Johnson, will gobble you up without salt."

How can we help to protect the ROW system in the face of Austerity?

Are you on for a new adventure?

I suppose that not since the glory days of the struggles of 75 years ago has the Ramblers Association faced such a threat to the survival of the rights of way system as it does now. I am sure it will come as no surprise to any of our members that the ROW teams in our local authorities are facing financial cuts of the order of twenty five to thirty per cent. This will severely diminish their ability to continue to maintain the system either in terms of its legal integrity or its physical existence.

In our area we have a good record of working for path maintenance, but it has seemed to many of us that, in face of the current threat, we need to shift our game up a gear or two if we are to help our colleagues in the local authorities to do what is necessary to keep the system in repair. Working to keep paths clear is, of course, one way to help. But in the new situation where rather more demanding work may be needed, we must recognise well-meaning amateur clearing gangs may not be the best way of giving effective, efficient help to the beleaguered local authority ROW teams.

Some of us have therefore been considering what else we could reasonably do to meet the new need and have concluded we could do worse than to follow an existing example in our area, which is that of the Cotswold Volunteer Wardens. This is a body of some three hundred volunteers who support the Cotswold Conservation Board by tackling jobs like stile and bridge building, hanging gates, repairing stone work and various forestry jobs like coppicing woods. They are trained to work to a fully professional standard. Their reward is to know that they have made a significant contribution to the maintenance of our beautiful countryside, and to enjoy membership of a vital and friendly team.

We are therefore looking at whether we can establish a Rambler team to work alongside the Cotswold Wardens in the areas not covered by the Conservation Board. It is very early days: we are currently at the stage of learning from the Cotswold Wardens about the training required, which specialist tools we need to possess and considering how to form a small team to see how we go, and how all this can be financed. We hope to be able to discuss our conclusions with the local authorities towards the end of this year.

Meanwhile, it would be an enormous help to know how many of you would like to become involved in this important activity. At this stage it is difficult to predict how much time this will involve, but we are planning the finances on the basis that each team does a job a week and we are aiming to size the teams so that each member can be involved two mornings (ie about eight hours) a month. We are also aiming to emulate the Cotswold Wardens in offering the chance of receiving training in skills like hedge-laying and dry stone walling. If you feel you are interested in acquiring skills of this sort and volunteering to work in this scheme, or if you simply would like to know what progress we are making, please let me know.

Practical Path Work – Volunteer Footpath Maintenance

On the 27th July 2011 I attended a “training” session organised by Central Office in Kettering, Northants to learn what I could about “practical footpath work”. Or what we prefer to call “Volunteer Footpath Maintenance”. David Waterstone and Keith Budd also attended. The meeting was remarkable in that it was one of the few Ramblers events of its kind where people were willing to listen to what was said rather than tell the rest of us how much better they do it in their Area. So I take it that there is a genuine desire to get to grips with the challenge and an understanding that no-one has all the answers.

We heard from volunteers from three Areas. The first was from our Northamptonshire hosts. Their story was a bit worrying because Northamptonshire Council is one of the few to have completely privatised their Rights of Way Department – not just the practical side but professionals and administration. There was concern in the audience about how volunteers were contributing to a better footpath network when the whole job has been put out to the lowest bidder with a contract said to be “at cost”. The presenters were keen to emphasise that they would not be doing it just to increase the profits of a private company. But they were unable to give a convincing explanation of how it works otherwise. The Northants team specialise exclusively in steps because these are a time-consuming activity that company is loathe to take on. It turned out that there are only three of them which is not how we in Avon expect to operate. Primarily we learnt from these genuine enthusiasts that a lot of good work can be done by a small team. But it misses out on the complexity of a working relationship with the Council when lots of smaller jobs are tackled.

Next up was Chesterfield and Northeast Derbyshire. They made great play of the fact that most of their work is inspired by keeping the local 27 mile round walk up together. They claim to be able to call on 16 volunteers but probably only up to 6 at a time. It looks as if a lady volunteer does all the administration. It is worth noting that although there was a sprinkling of women in the audience all the presenters were male. One gathers that neither the Chesterfield nor Northants teams charge for the work except that Northants claim expenses. Chesterfield volunteers seem to be out of pocket. Once again this is not the model we are working on. However they have a wide range of skills including bridge building, fencing, dry stone walling, revetments and ditch clearance. Whereas Northants have a large company behind them, Chesterfield have the advantage of an active “Countryside Services” department in the Council. Their patch includes part of the Peak District. We would have to paddle our own canoe.

The final presentation was from Cornwall. Their experience was not typical in that a lot of money had become available and large teams were clearing severely overgrown footpaths rather than the routine stuff we are more likely to encounter.

In between times there were mini discussions of points of interest – tools, insurance, etc. and the “paperwork”. Northants were probably over the top in setting up the job including checking for cables and other underground services. But it looks as if some sort of survey, risk assessment, and signing off the job are regarded as the minimum essentials.

So what was learnt from the meeting. We knew that Councils are organised differently and Ramblers’ Areas will have had different histories of path clearance. Every Area will have to find a system that suits their particular circumstances. We did not learn much that we have not already thought about. But that in itself was re-assuring.

Ron Phelps August 2011

New Warden for the Monarchs Way - Update

There are a couple of items which could be of interest for the next Area News and AC meeting. In the last edition of 'Walk' there was an item in which a group of footpath volunteers were asking about insurance cover. The advice given was a very convoluted system involving contacting national office with details of ages and addresses of the work party.

I wrote to central office giving an overview of what had happened in South Glos since Cyril Trenfield set up the footpath liaison committee with S Glos ROW Dept. I pointed out that one of the main benefits was that footpath volunteers were covered for insurance. I received a very nice letter from Mr E Wilson (Volunteer Support and Development Officer) thanking me for all the volunteer work carried out by various groups in Avon Area. He said there was to be a Practical Path Work Day and asked if Southwold would be willing to be a case study which would be used as a model for other interested groups to use. I replied that we were quite happy to be used as a case study. I have not received any information regarding the path day but will update you on anything I receive in the future.

Regarding the items on The Monarchs Way, I think I can bring you up-to-date on what is happening at present. Last year at a liaison meeting Nicola Chidley (ROW Officer) told us that the gentleman who set up The Monarchs Way had died and she asked if anybody would take on the monitoring of the section which went through South Glos. I volunteered and was given the contact number for his widow. I contacted her and she seemed very grateful that somebody was willing to carry out the survey, and has enrolled me as a warden. She did promise to send me some way marks and information booklets but, despite phoning her again, I have not received any mail. So far we have surveyed The Monarchs Way from Horton to Downton and have not found any major problems. The minor problems have been reported to South Glos ROW Dept.

By The Way

Five Leaves: 5 – The Silver Birch

There are at least thirteen species of birch trees, including the silver birch, the canoe birch (whose bark was used to make birch-bark canoes and wigwam covers, baskets, dishes and trays), the hairy birch and the cherry birch. Symbolically associated with birth and new beginnings, the silver birch is one of the first trees to recolonise an area after a mature forest is cut down.

The tall, pale trunks rise like cathedral columns and the higher arching branches delicately interweave. The silver birch and the hairy birch are smallish short-lived trees and cast little shade thus enabling many other plants, such as grass, heather and oak and beech saplings to thrive. Their leaves are rhomboid and long-pointed with toothed edges.

Noticing Nature –

Rosebay Willowherb and the Elephant Hawk Moth

At around this time of year, largely on waste ground and at the unproductive margins of fields, we have the emergence of a wonderfully colourful plant, rosebay willow-herb. Actually, it is often found growing where fires have been, hence its old fashioned name, fireweed.

That explains why the plant so readily colonised bomb sites after the Second World War. What it lacks in scent, it certainly makes up for, albeit briefly, in its contribution to the landscape, with its height of several feet and spikes of rose-coloured flowers.

The Victorians actually used this plant for bedding in ornamental gardens, a far cry from the locations where you might expect to find it in the twenty-first century.

A little known fact about rosebay willow herb is that it is the host plant for the incredible elephant hawk moth.

These spectacular insects, whose colour matches that of the plant's rose-coloured petals as camouflage, have a wingspan of between 45 and 60 millimetres. They are quite harmless, and, if you're lucky, as you walk through an area that previously appeared to have little of interest in it, you might just see one.

I hope you do!

Chris Phillips - Bath Natural History Society

Country Occupations: Hedge-laying

If a hedge is really overgrown, with tall, Inky growth and gaps at the bottom, then it will require the attentions of a good man (or woman) who is skilled in the art of hedge-laying.

The principles are fairly simple, but the business of putting a dishevelled hedge into order does require a certain determination and grip, both mental and physical. Years ago I learnt from Mr George, my neighbour, that the first thing you had to do was to identify those vertical branches which would form the main part of the hedge.

Then, using a billhook, you had to slice about two thirds of the way into each branch a few inches up from its base and bend them until they were about 30 degrees from the vertical. It was, Mr George said, very important not to bend the branches too far; the sap must continue to flow upwards. In the next stage, you had to drive some prepared stakes of suitable thickness into the ground about two feet apart at the opposite angle to the bent-over branches.

The final tidying -up stage consisted of weaving or 'pleaching' any secondary branches between the main branches and the stakes, and to reinforce or bind the top of the hedge with separate whippy hazel or willow wands before trimming off those branches which did not contribute to a shapely hedge.

A well-laid hedge. my neighbour told me, could last up to fifteen years.

It seems that hedge-laying styles vary considerably throughout England and Wales according to the materials available, and such is the mystique of the craft that fierce competitions are held annually.

Eric Robinson - Bath Group

Did you know that....

1. Stilton cheese was first made at Quenby Hall, an unspoilt Jacobean country house, by the housekeeper, Frances Pullett, She supplied the Bell Inn at Stilton where it was stored in the cellars. Originally called Quenby cheese, it was given the name of Stilton by the travellers who took a liking to its 'unrivalled pungency and saltiness'..
- 2 According to the Roman writer. the younger Pliny, a man from Cadiz travelled all the way to Rome expressly to see the renowned historian, Livy, and having seen him, went straight back - the mighty capital contained nothing else so wonderful.

From 'Walk' – Summer 2011

" A lot of people today don't realise that every footpath in Britain was created for a purpose - be it a parishioner's way, a pack-horse route, a Roman road, or even a modern path leading out of town.

They are such a marvellous link with our cultural heritage".
